18 months yellow, well ribbed body, good bone and feet, strong hind quarters, good double coat of correct texture, when his handler stands still and away from the dog he presents a pleasing overall outline, however his handler is too fuzzy and continously moves giving wrong signals to the dog. He stands too often with his head and neck too upright, giving the wrong impression of his front assembly. It was only when I got my hands on the dog I realised he was correctly made of all.

black obviously built a long field trial lines, with long pastence and long hocks, slight bone, sweet head and expression, why do the field trial people breed the dogs with thin single coats, when a true labrador coat would be an advantage to them on a cold winters morning big boned heavy black dog, although he is balanced , there is too much all over to be the true labrador, I was told to appreciate. I know this type is favoured by the americans, but to be an all purpose working breed he is far too heavy. This is shown up un his ponderious movement

I like the calm sensible temperament on this black dog, which has been at a premium today. this would feature highly for me when choosing a standard, however this dog has an exceptionally dry nose. Nice top line, though sloping away of the croup, otherwise pleasing construction, moves well

I particulaly like the head and expression of the yellow which to me is typical of the old fashioned yellow labrador. He is well boned and muscled with big ribs and good neck and shoulders, however his legs seem to short for his overall body spoiling his balance.A real failing is a very high tail coat on the move. For this reason I will absolutly award him very good.

very pale yellow, nicely made all through, moves well, but is far too overweight over the shoulders, so that the duelp swings as it comes towards me. Adding to this his tail set on the move is very proud. However , underneath all these facts there is a nice dog trying to get out. I am being generous awarding him an excellent

Good double coat of the correct texture. His real shows up on the move, he is free striding showing flexibility of the joints as well as strength. A really lovely specimen
